

Cultivate Commons

In a post-growth scenario 50 years from now, focusing in Lviv, Ukraine, following the challenges of war and climate change, Cultivate Commons envisions a decentralized approach to food security, fostering social cohesion and ecological balance.

This project establishes a network of therapeutic gardens and pathways connecting Lviv's suburbs to its city center. These interconnected spaces serve as hubs for urban agriculture, community farming, and shared experiences, promoting local food production and self sufficiency. The gardens offer a place for healing, collaboration, and cultural exchange, creating a vital infrastructure that nurtures both people and the environment.
