

Refúgio do Cotidiano, meaning “Everyday Refuge,” is a thoughtfully designed home that blends daily living with relaxation. Inspired by the Pereiro do Cha house, it adopts the concept of “detouring,” which eliminates traditional hallways in favor of a more natural, indirect flow between rooms. This approach encourages slower, more mindful movement through the home, making every space functional and enjoyable. The house is divided into three equally important zones, each 8 meters in length: the private zone, the common area, and the usage zone. The private zone includes bedrooms and bathrooms, offering quiet spaces for rest and reflection. The common area acts as the social heart of the house, featuring a large seating platform and a foot onsen to support both gathering and relaxation. The usage zone houses the kitchen and storage areas, balancing practicality with openness and sociability. Every space in the house is designed to be purposeful, supporting a lifestyle that values both activity and calm. By integrating relaxation into the rhythm of everyday life, Refúgio do Cotidiano reimagines home as a peaceful and engaging environment where all aspects of living are thoughtfully connected.
