

To rewild is giving nature a chance to be wild again, just like it was before, and to have maintenance is taking care of something to keep it working well, allowing for longevity. Relating the two words together ensures the maintenance supports the idea of rewilding to allow plants to thrive and flourish. Following Barragan's idea of "I don't separate architecture, landscape, gardening; to me they are one," I decided to design a space where humans and nonhumans coexist.
