

KOH SIRAY SEAFOOD MARKET

All-in-one integrated design showcased through the roof structure

TYPE: Elementary and the sea

LOCATION: Koh Siray, Phuket, Thailand

The Koh Siray Seafood Market is situated at the upcoming Koh Siray International Port, a government-led project aimed at creating a marine hub capable of accommodating large vessels and boosting Phuket's marine tourism industry. This project highlights the issue that, while the international port holds great potential for economic growth and the development of Koh Siray, it seems to overlook the essence and needs of the local residents and hide the unique aesthetic of Koh Siray.

the market not only represents the identity of Koh Siray but also addresses the needs of the local community. It aims to leverage the benefits of the government's initiative in a way that not only avoids disrupting the lives of local residents but also actively supports their livelihoods, particularly the fishermen. The market will serve as a platform to celebrate the beauty of Koh Siray and preserve its unique culture. Through its design by roof structure and programs, the market will showcase the traditions, craftsmanship, and way of life of the local community, blending modern development with cultural sustainability.

The market presents a harmonious solution that aligns with future development while preserving the essence of Koh Siray. By creating an organized and well-integrated system, the market ensures that the local residents are supported, the cultural identity of the community is celebrated, and the experience for tourists is enriched. This approach not only avoids disrupting the future growth of the area but also balance between modern development and the traditions of Koh Siray, creating a sustainable model that benefits everyone involved.
