

Ha-I To-I

Furniture is designed to create a personal space within a shared area, inspired by the private living room in The Naked House, shows how to make people feel at home by using simple materials and thoughtful layouts. I brought this idea into my design by focusing on privacy, flexibility, and cultural meaning. The cork wood used in the armrest helps block sound, creating a quiet zone for the person sitting there. It's not just for comfort but also adds a sense of personal space in open environments. I included sliding doors in the design, which are a nod to traditional Japanese homes, blending cultural elements with modern use. These doors also let users choose how open or closed their space feels. Finally, the furniture has casters underneath, making it easy to move and rearrange. This allows it to adapt to different activities and needs, just like how people use their homes in flexible ways.
